Hickory Trees.
It is rather a pity that our hickories should receive highest appreciation from us when they are yielding up their substance in rotting flames in our fireplaces. For nowhere in the forest world can we find a genus of trees that is, as a whole, more attractive and valuable than the genus hickoria. Most of the hickories are beautiful in summer when their glossy foliage is at its best. In autumn this foliage turns the color of uncolored gold, and when bare of leaves there is revealed an oaklike twist to the branches which makes these trees most picturesque and beautiful objects in the winter landscape. We have never made as much commercially of the nuts as we might well have done. Our Indian predecessors knew how to make a most attractive beverage from them and the early settlers pressed from them an oil that was a luxury. The pecan is the only hickory species that has been developed and cultivated to any extent, and this has only recently begun its career as a cultivated tree—Country Life in America.

A Royal Locksmith.
Louis XVI had a passion for the locksmith's trade, and it is said that over his private library he had a forge, two anvils and a vast number of iron tools, together with all kinds of locks, common as well as those of a secret and elaborate variety. It was here that the king would conceal himself from the queen and the court to fight and forge with the infamous Gamlin, who taught him the art of locksmithing. It is said that Gamlin while teaching the king his trade took upon himself the tone and authority of a master, and, according to this same master, the king was good, forbearing, timid, inquisitive and addicted to sleep. Louis had also a great passion for timepieces, and the difficulty which he found in adjusting his clocks and watches is said to have drawn from him the reflection that it was absurd of him to attempt to bring men to a thing like uniformity of belief in matters of faith when he couldn't make any two of his timepieces agree with each other.

Don't Talk Much to Your Horse.
A horse who has always been made to obey quickly will respond to commands from any one, whereas the creature who has been petted and talked to accords, unless hungry, scant attention to any one. We talk to horses altogether too much, and it is a silly and dangerous custom. "Whoa!" should mean but one thing and, slip, slide or fell, should meet with instant obedience. Not another word should ever be used, beyond possibly the order to "stand out" in the stall (although even that is best unsaid) except the "click" of the tongue for increased speed. The animal's attention is kept if you are silent. He does not know what you will do next, and as he distrusts and merely tolerates you, even as he fears you, his anxiety is always to find out what you wish done or what move you will next make.—F. M. Ware in Outing Magazine.

Didn't Know the Cipher.
The inability to read a cipher once cost a notable of France his head. When the Chevalier de Rohan was in the Bastille his friends, wishing to let him know that his accomplice had died without confessing, passed the following cipher, written on a shirt, into his dungeon: "Mg dulkreclgu ghj xyl; lm et ulge alj." The cipher was not a difficult one, being arranged by a complete transposition of the alphabet, but De Rohan did not have the clew, and he puzzled over the meaningless words in vain. A solution of the riddle meant the guillotine or his freedom, but the puzzle was beyond him, and he pleaded guilty because he could not decipher "Le prisonnier est mort: il n'a rien dit."

Postmaster Robbed.
G. W. Fouts, Postmaster at Riverton, Ia., nearly lost his life as he was robbed of all his money. He was traveling on a train, and "For 20 years I had chronic liver complaint, which led to such a severe case of jaundice that even my finger nails turned yellow; when my doctor prescribed Electric Bitters, which cured me and have kept me well for eleven years."
